PSC Provides Back to School Lesson Plans

As a new school year begins, the Public Service Commission of West Virginia is providing much needed resources to help the State's teachers. The lesson plans found on the Commission's website are designed to give a hands-on, scientific approach to helping students understand how we get the energy, water and other natural resources on which we depend in our daily lives. These lesson plans also address the subject of conservation to help preserve the earth and to teach students how their families can lower their monthly utility bills.

The Commission has developed and collected lesson plans that are appropriate for use by classes from kindergarten through high school. Those plans can be found on our website at <http://www.psc.state.wv.us/KidCorner/teacher.htm>

The lesson plans include conservation tips, science experiments, art projects, group activities, discussion topics and many other useful tools for teachers. Although they were originally prepared for Earth Day, these lesson plans can be used throughout the year and will remain available on the "Kid's Corner" page of the Commission website.
